Does Mama have a bit of a sweettooth? If so, icewine could be just the treat.

When an early frost hit vineyards in Franconia, Germany in 1794, the distressed growers decided to press the grapes anyway, hoping to salvage at least a part of the crop. What later emerged from the barrels was icewine.

Relatively recently, icewines have started to also come from Canada, including those from Peller Estates.

Harvest doesn't begin until temperatures are consistently below 14° F, when the juice separates into ice crystals and a sweet concentrated syrup.

The grapes are picked and sorted by hand, immediately pressed, and yield only one drop of juice from each grape.

Although born frozen, Peller Estates' icewine is all about sweet tropical flavors such as apricot, peaches, ripe mango, and honeydew melon, with a luscious mouthfeel.
